legend, Paul died in a car crash in 1966 and was replaced by an impostor.²⁷

Written accounts of the Paul Is Dead story first appeared in college newspapers in the fall of 1969.²⁸ For three weeks, Paul's death was one of the main topics of conversation in America.²⁹ The possibility that he could be dead was discussed on the "evening news of all three major television networks, and in prestigious national magazines such as Time and Life."³⁰

"Many fans have claimed that the rumour was a hoax perpetrated by The Beatles, either as a joke, or to stimulate record sales. This was denied numerous times by all four band members."³¹ Ken Mansfield, author of The Beatles, The Bible and Bodega Bay, was the overseer of the band's projects and the running of Apple Records' US operations.³² When asked whether the "Paul is Dead" uproar had been staged, Mansfield answered, "I don't know. They left me hanging... Nobody gave me a straight answer. The band let it have a life of its own."³³ While in Moscow, Russia in 2005, an audience member asked McCartney if he were "natural or

"[T]here is enough data on offer to suggest that something mysterious or untoward is afoot."³⁶ In addition to "the intriguing and compelling clues," thought-provoking and convincing evidence is presented in support of PID.³⁷ For example, the colors red (symbolizing blood) and black (death) were used frequently in The Beatles' album art after Paul's alleged death.³⁸ The predominant use of red in McCartney's artwork has even convinced some art critics that the PID rumor could be true.³⁹ Art expert, Baird Jones, explained that McCartney "predominantly uses the colour red in ways one would not. It's the colour of blood and death."⁴⁰ Jones believes that the clues in McCartney's art "might be evidence that the Paul McCartney we think we know is not Paul McCartney; he's an imposter..."⁴¹ party for Paul McCartney and Jane Asher, for their engagement situation. I noticed that Paul was not paying any attention to Jane, but was rather cozy with Linda Eastman, the photographer girl who had taken the pictures on a recent tour. According to Roby Yonge, Marks noticed that “Paul” looked different.⁴⁴ Marks said, “I was at the engagement party for Jane Asher and Paul McCartney... A couple of years later, on March 12, 1969, McCartney married Linda Eastman, which was thought to be proof that he was not the real Paul.⁴⁶ This was due not only to the fact that he married someone other than long-term girlfriend, Jane Asher, but also because Paul had said on several occasions that he did not like marriage, thought that it was “no good,” and even found the idea of

McCartney’s failure to attend his father’s funeral in Liverpool, England on March 22, 1976 has also raised doubts as to his true identity.⁵¹ McCartney was traveling from Copenhagen, Denmark on March 21, 1976 to Berlin, Germany for a March 23, 1976 concert.⁵² He did not have a concert on March 22 and, therefore, could have gone to the funeral.⁵³ It is thought that he chose not to attend for fear that Paul’s family members would recognize him as being an impostor.⁵⁴

So I went in and did a day's work in a kind of shock. And as I was coming out of the studio later, there was a reporter, and as we were driving away, he just stuck the microphone in the window and shouted, 'What do you think about John's death?' I had just finished a whole day in shock and I said, 'It's a drag.' I meant drag in the heaviest sense of the word, you know: 'It's a--drag.' the video footage showed that he was walking on a public street in London at the time, and was not in a car.⁶⁰ Many consider McCartney's apathetic response to the shooting to be evidence that he had never actually been close to Lennon, as it was the original Paul who had forged those bonds.⁶¹

⁶¹ McCartney's resentment of Lennon is clear in this rambling statement: "When John got shot... I started to get frustrated because people started to say, 'Well he was The Beatles.' And me George and Ringo would go 'Er hang on. It's only a year ago we were all equal-ish.' John was the witty one, sure. John did a lot of great work. And post-Beatles he did more great work, but he also did a lot of not-great work. Now the fact that he's now martyred has elevated him to a James Dean and beyond. So whilst I didn't mind that - I agreed with it - I understood that now there was going to be revisionism. It was going to be: John was the one. I mean if you just pull out all his great stuff and then stack it up against my not-so-great stuff it's an easy case to make." Shelokhonov. "Paul McCartney Biography."

Paul is dead.⁶³ Beatles' producer, George Martin, even said he was beginning to believe it himself.⁶⁴ Joel Glazier recalled, "At the time, people took it very seriously. It was the end of the '60s. You have to remember this was against the backdrop of the assassinations of Martin Luther King [Jr.] and Bobby Kennedy, as well as the Vietnam War and the Pentagon Papers. So this sounded like the perfect conspiracy cover-up. People stayed up all night talking about it, and some were actually quite scared."⁶⁵ Paul McGraft, a 14-year-old Beatles fan in Ann Arbor, Michigan at the time, said, "I can remember my friends and I reading articles in fan magazines and poring over our record albums to find clues. To us, listening to those backwards tracks on the White Album was as scary as any ghost story I ever heard at summer camp."⁶⁶

Shock jock, Howard Stern, is among those who think that Paul is dead. In a 2001 interview with John Lennon's first wife, Cynthia Powell Lennon, Howard Stern noted, "Paul McCartney has proven something has happened to him. I believe that Paul did die and this guy running around now is not Paul McCartney.... I believe he did die because the guy running around now can't be Paul McCartney. Beatles' 1965 film, Help!, put it, "a sosia."⁶⁹ This fact was proven in 2009 by a team of Italian forensic scientists.⁷⁰ Anthropometrical and craniometrical differences between pictures taken of Paul before 1966 and after his alleged car crash showed that they were two different people.⁷¹ The biometrical analysis has been confirmed by facial recognition software and voiceprints.⁷²

An incredulous John Paul Roberts asked Roby Yonge in a 1995 interview, "Are you really telling us that the original Paul McCartney was not the later Paul McCartney, that there was a double?"⁷³ Yonge replied, "'There really is' is more like it... The McCartney situation is real. They replaced him with somebody special..."⁷⁴ In 2011, Ringo Starr revealed that he was "the last remaining Beatle," implying that all of the others, including Paul,

It is thought that the switch operation was “completed... by the time recording for the *Sgt. Even the impostor, “McCartney II,” has admitted that he is not the original Beatle Paul. For example, in the November 21, 1966 Express, he divulged, “I’m not Paul McCartney, but I’m sometimes mistaken for him.”⁸⁶ In 1972, he told Claes Elfberg in an interview that he was standing in for Paul because “Paul McCartney’s dead, of course.”⁸⁷ “He also recalled being asked by a fan if he really [were] Paul McCartney and responded, ‘No, but I wish I had his money!’”⁸⁸ When talk show host, David Letterman, while referencing PID, said, “There was a guy who looked like you,

Mark Twain once observed, “It’s easier to fool people than to convince them that they have been fooled.”⁹³ The Paul is Dead subject may be especially controversial “because people love The Beatles with great passion. If the new Paul is not the real Paul, it will be a terrible betrayal...”⁹⁴ Heather Mills, McCartney II’s second wife, warned that people do not want to know the truth, because they could never handle it.⁹⁵
